

RMYLC encouraged and challenged me and my peers to face, discuss, and debate real world problems from taxes and renewable energy to human honor and dignity in a safe and collaborative setting. Among my peers at RMYLC are several young military officers, aspiring scientists, and fledgling business leaders.

The guest speakers were memorable, inspirational, and influential on my development as a scholar and leader. It was a forum for myself and other young intellectuals to begin applying our knowledge and fully understanding what huge impacts they can have in the "real world".

I cannot recommend RMYLC enough!.

[Ed.] Isaac is a graduate of the University of Colorado, Colorado Springs and is commissioned with the Arizona National Guard. Isaac graduated from the Rocky Mountain Youth Leadership Conference in 2017 where he won the Lieutenant General Ben Bellis Award. The Lt. Gen Ben Bellis Award winner is selected for Creativity (the ability to conceive and produce something original), and Judgment (the capacity to make sound and effective decisions). Lt. Gen. Bellis was a graduate of West Point Military Academy and retired from the Air Force. General Bellis was Air Force leader responsible for the development of the SR-71 and F-15 aircraft. He also served as president of the Transatlantic Council of Boy Scouts of America.